CP Day 10 - Águeda

2 Apr 2016

This little piglet went to market...and didn't come home. Jackie got an attack of guilt the next morning....although it didn't prevent her from scoffing the little fella the night before.

Leitão = piglet by the way. I'm not sure that this statue would have been of much use to them though - their fate was already sealed..and seared.

After 5km we diverted through Anadia, where Jackie decided to dispense with water bottles and just go straight to the source. Luckily she wasn't tempted by anything from the market...as I wasn't about to carry it!

Breakfast in Anadia -we've now got the galãos sussed, and Jacks seems pretty on top of the pastries. A walk it through retirement village central reminded us of the need to stay fit!

São João was rubbish - mainly because the wine tour I'd been promised was shut. Not a happy bunny

We therefore walked through São João rather quickly

The albergue was great though - lovely terrace, and we had a dorm room to ourselves. The only drawback was we were 2km up a hill out of town...

However, there was a well-stocked kitchen and we were only 300m from a Lidl. So we stocked up and fed & watered 4 people for less than €20 with plenty left over. Oh and some port to finish off with courtesy of Canadian Chris.
