CP Day 16 - Ponte da Lima

8 Apr 2016

Daybreak over the church next to our albergue.

I was getting the washing in at the time, having done 2 loads by mistake last night - the dirty AND the clean pile...doh!

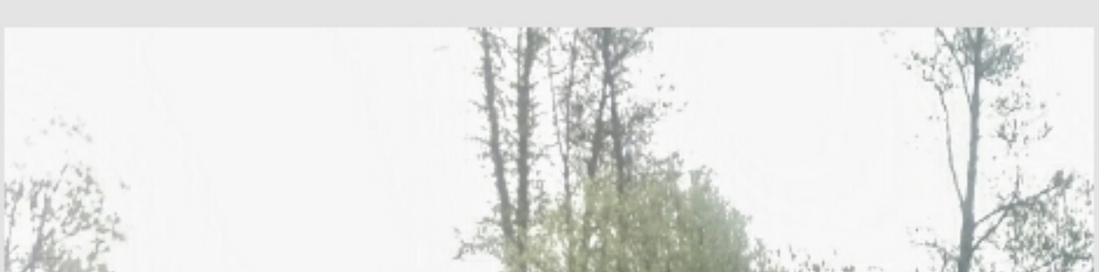

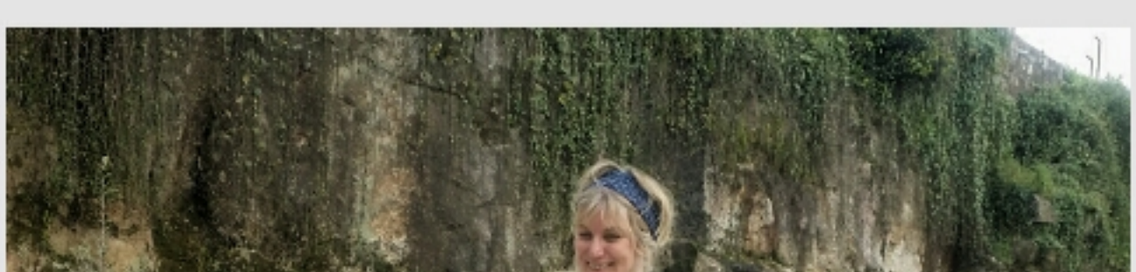

Quite a hilly day today; lots of cobblestone roads with running streams mixed with short, steep climbs.

Jacks decided to get some extra hill training in...

A lot more crosses and shrines in this part of the world

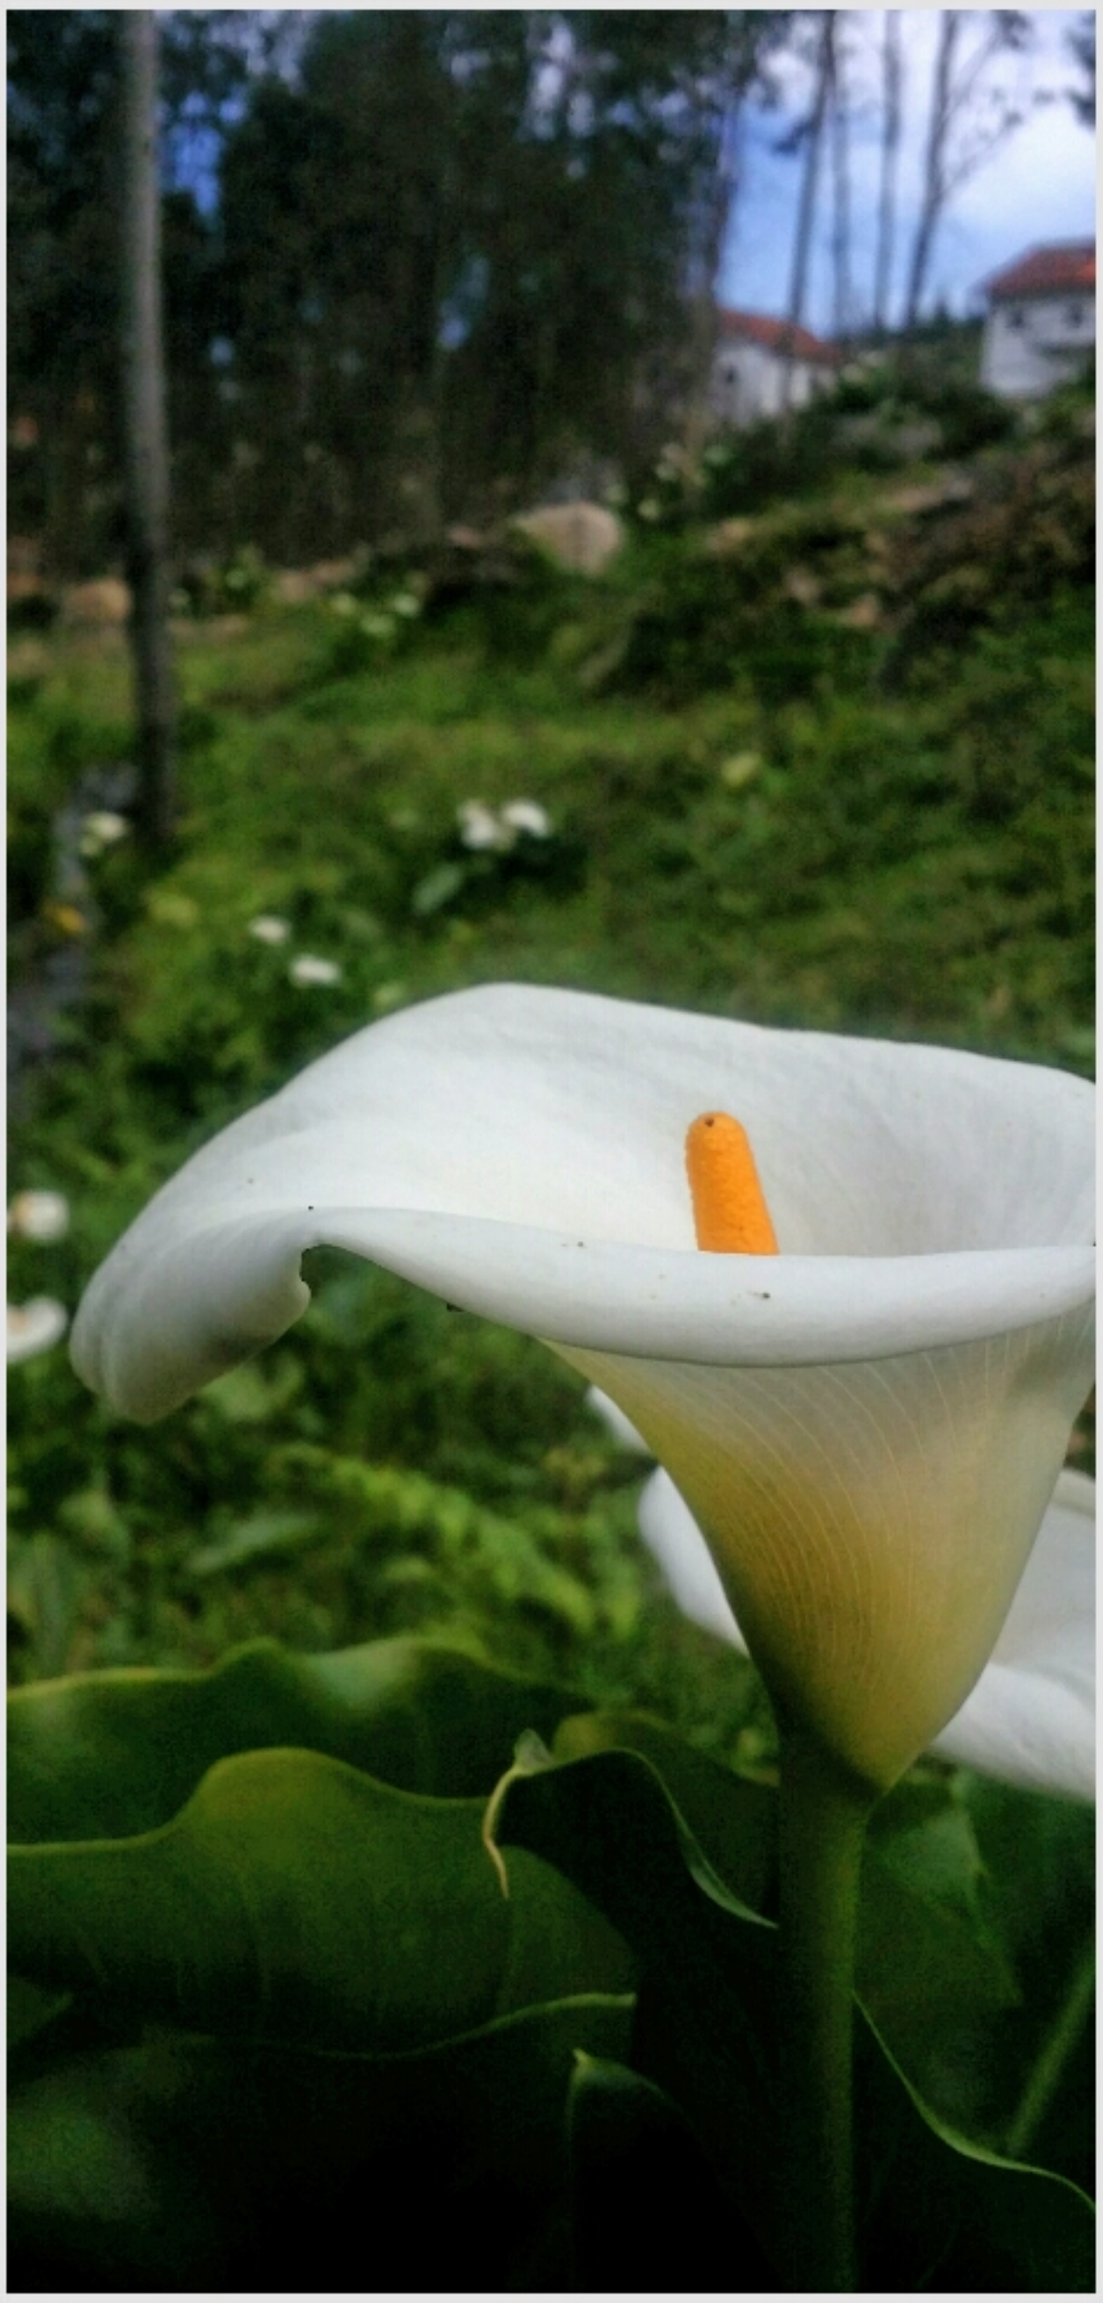

We're now 1/3rd of the way from Porto to Santiago.

Lilies grow wild everywhere in Portugal but there was a particularly lovely section after Vitorino dos Piâes...and Jacks reckons I don't surround her with flowers often enough!

The trees are all coming into blossom. I quite liked this shot - something about the tree in the tub being tended to!

Cobblestones may be pretty but they're hard work to walk upon. Jacks was entering into the last part of her day. The words 'weaaak' often floated up the road behind me.....

Very scenic walk into Ponte de Lima, although the beauty was somewhat lost upon Jacks during the last few km.

Met up with Hans again (who had been reunited with his guidebook) + assorted Germans.
"Zee you tomorrow, ze next day, or never!"
